Chaffeur Killed at Lexington.

At three o'clock Friday afternoon while speeding along the road three miles west of Lexington, an automobile driven by Bob Reed overturned and Reed was instantly killed and Mrs. R. N. Metzger, in the machine with him, the two being on a trip across the state from Denver to Council Bluffs, was quite seriously injured and is now at a hotel in that city in the care of physicians.

Before overturning the car had skidded. Reed was caught between the steering wheel and the earth and his neck was broken and his face badly crushed. The woman was not badly injured so far as external appearances indicated but it is feared has sustained internal injuries.

She refused at first to give the name of her companion but when the coroner pressed her for answer gave it as Bob Reed. The woman's husband is said to be in Kansas City and was later informed by wire of the accident.

Witty Ann Pitt.

Bollingbroke called England's great statesman, William Pitt (Lord Chatham), "Sublimity Pitt," and he dubbed his sister Ann "Divinity Pitt." But that must have been long after there were written and received the delightful letters addressed to Pitt's "Dearest Nanny," his "Little Nan," his "Little Jug."

"Oh, for the restless tongue of dear little Jug!" he exclaims in a letter written by him from Northampton when, a lad of twenty-three, he had but lately joined his regiment.

Ann Pitt's restless tongue was never stilled, for when Chesterfield, calling on her in his later life, complained of decay with the words, "I fear that I am growing an old woman," Ann briskly replied:

"I am glad of it. I was afraid you were growing an old man, which, as you know, is a much worse thing."

Branding Leifers.

The brand of "S" figures in an extraordinary act passed by parliament in 1547. An able-bodied man or woman found loitering and not seeking work for the space of three days could be seized and brought before two justices of the peace, who, upon confession or on the proof of two witnesses, "shall immediately cause the said laborer to be marked with a hot iron on the breast the mark of 'V' and adjudge the said person living so idly to his presentor, to be his slave for two years. The said slave shall be made to work by beating, chaining or otherwise." If convicted of running away during this period the justices could cause him to be branded on the forehead or the cheek with the letter "S" and then adjudge to his master as a slave forever. For running away a second time the penalty was death.—London Standard.

Illustrated His System.

It was a habit of the wise Frenchman Arago to look during his lectures at the young man who appeared the dullest of the students, and when he perceived that this one understood he knew all the others did.

Once in a drawing room he had just explained this habit of his to some friends when a young man entered and saluted him familiarly. "But to whom have I the honor of speaking?" asked the scientist. "Why, Professor Arago, you do not know me? I always attend your lectures, and you never take your eyes off me the whole time."

Kaffir English.

As a sample of Kaffir English here is a love letter sent by a Cape Colony boy to his dusky innamorata:

Dear Miss— I have great confidence in the wisdom of my opinion that I shall thank for kindness if you will give me the privilege of lettering with you concerning love, as your most winning face has drawn my serious attention to you, and that I shall appreciate you in anticipation of an early reply and also terminating this with supreme of high enunciation. NED.

Taken at His Word.

"Since you are so busy today," said the urbane journalist, "will you kindly tell me when and where I can meet you for an interview?"

"Go to blazes!" exclaimed the irate politician. "Thanks. I'll consider it an appointment."—Washington Star.
